Local architects, Mathewson Waters, appoint new architectural technologist as practice continues to grow

Local architects, Mathewson Waters, have announced the appointment of Kirsty McKenzie as the company's latest architectural technologist. Kirsty is the company's third technologist and takes the total number of staff at the practice to 12. The company, which is celebrating 30 years in business, offers clients a full architectural service from initial designs, planning advice and guidance, through working drawings, tenders, administration of a building contract to completion of work on site.

Duncan Mathewson, founding partner, said; "We are delighted that Kirsty has joined our team and she brings with her a wealth of experience gained on some very large and complex buildings."

"The opportunity to work on smaller, but no less technically challenging, individual projects was a real attraction. It enables me to become far more involved with the clients and see an entire project through to completion. I love the process of helping transform paper plans into a dream home and the days when I'm on site are a real highlight of my role," says Kirsty.

Having completed her education at The Clere School in Burghclere, Kirsty went onto study for professional qualifications and is a member of the Chartered Institute of Architectural Technologists. Now back living in Newbury, she is also a Governor at Falkland School.

Background

Based in West Berkshire, Mathewson Waters Architects is an established RIBA Chartered architectural practice which has developed an excellent reputation for being approachable, creative, thoughtful, reliable and professional.

Led by Duncan Mathewson along with four other very experienced partners, including a Conservation Architect, MWA delivers a total service from initial consultation and evaluation, through all the necessary processes to completion of the building. With its primary office in Lambourn and satellite studios in North Hampshire and Wiltshire, the company serves a growing number of clients looking for commercial, domestic and specialist equine developments across the region.
