TimeFinders strengthens team with latest appointment

TimeFinders, the company that offers bespoke practical help and emotional support for older people and their families in changing circumstances, has announced the appointment of Charlotte Riley as its newest TimeFinder. Charlotte brings with her exceptional skills and experiences, including serving in the Royal Navy and more recently working in occupational health.

Alison Hesketh, founder and MD of TimeFinders, said; "We are delighted that Charlotte has joined our team of very special people. The role of a TimeFinder requires people to be compassionate, practical and patient, and Charlotte's obvious empathy is a bonus which has led to her being warmly received by the clients she has already met."

Whilst TimeFinders face to face support has been temporarily suspended by the outbreak of Covid-19, the company is continuing to provide help via telephone and video calls and has adapted its innovative Advocacy and Contingency Planning Services to meet the needs of clients in isolation.

Commenting on her new role, Charlotte said: "I have admired the work of TimeFinders for some time, and whenever I heard Alison speak about the business I was moved by her passion and integrity. It is a unique service they are offering clients and I can't wait to get involved. TimeFinders is a growing and ambitious business breaking new ground and I was attracted by the opportunity to start a brand-new career where I can be part of a dynamic and friendly team, and make good use of the transferable skills I have acquired both in my former nursing career and then as a business owner."

Charlotte's appointment takes the number of staff employed by TimeFinders to eight. As awareness of the company's unique service increases Alison is keen to hear from other people who may be interested in a role with the company. The company is now providing services across London and the south-east and has prospective clients throughout the region. Full training and support is provided and anyone wishing to know more should contact Alison direct on Alison.hesketh@timefinders.uk.com

Charlotte, who was born and grew up in Swindon, will be working in and around the area including North Wilts, South Oxfordshire, South Gloucestershire and West Berkshire. When not working with TimeFinders, Charlotte practices yoga and meditation and enjoys poetry, podcast and long walks with her family and their loyal English bulldog. She is also a volunteer steward for the Little Free library, which she helped to found in her local community a few years ago.

Background

TimeFinders was established 10 years ago by Alison Hesketh after her experience of helping her own mother navigate the challenges of downsizing and then embarking on a new phase of life. TimeFinders' services bridge the gap between the legal and financial professionals and the care sector. Pivotal to the company's growth and success has been Alison's determination to set the highest standards of integrity and transparency in a sector where there is currently no regulation. This was recognised by the company's appointment as Best Practise representative by The Parliamentary Review of Care. TimeFinders provides practical help and emotional support for older people and their families in changing circumstances and their ethos is to provide the very best person-centred support which respects, champions and empowers older people to make their own decisions.
